

Rocque's map of 1746 shows St Mary-le-Bone as a village divided from London by fields. The church and burying ground can be seen. By Richard's time much encroachment had already taken place.